Thomas Downes, Kieran M. Killeen, 2024-02-01 Faced with the problem of how to measure the magnitude of economic disadvantage in the populations served by schools or districts researchers addressing school finance topics have invariably turned to the fraction of students eligible for free or reduced lunches FRPL But the facile dependence on FRPL may be problematic A large and growing literature in learning sciences and in the field of education itself has pivoted towards studies that explore the relationship between social emotional health and the learning of children The growing body of research on social emotional health and learning e.g. Gershoff Aber Raver and Lennon 2007 suggests that more refined measures of wealth income and hardship more fully account for the effects of economic disadvantage than does FRPL Historically research in school finance has not utilized these refined measures but instead has depended on FRPL The Community Eligibility Provision CEP a recent change in how student eligibility for free lunch is determined may have the unintended and yet fortuitous consequence that it will force school finance researchers to use more sophisticated measures of student hardship The CEP makes it possible for schools serving low income populations to classify all students as eligible for free or reduced price lunch Koedel and Parsons 2021 argue that while FRPL might have been a workable measure of student disadvantage prior to CEP post CEP the extent of a school's or a district's population that is disadvantaged is no longer measured accurately by FRPL The CEP made accurate FRPL counts less critical for many schools and districts post pandemic legislation Vock 2023 in a number of states to make school meals free for all students in those states has increased the number of districts for which accurate counts are unimportant Fazlul Koedel and Parsons 2023 go on to argue that even prior to CEP FRPL failed to provide an accurate measure of a school or district's poverty This new policy environment makes it imperative to explore alternatives to FRPL and the implications for school finance The book aims to provide a timely collection of new research on a measurement issue that is central to much research on K 12 education finance The book is meant to serve scholars in education finance and policy who need a refined perspective on the context of schooling The book is also meant to serve students and faculty from programs in public administration public policy community development and applied economics education administration educational leadership and policy studies who are studying content related to education policy the economics of education state and local public finance and taxation Some upper level undergraduate students may also benefit from this resource

ENDORSEMENTS

Fundamental to understanding the efficacy of many policies and interventions is having a clear picture of student poverty The increasing uncertainty about the validity of student poverty measures due to changes in the free and reduced price lunch program in schools thus creates challenges for researchers and policymakers alike This book offers insights into how to think about the ongoing utility of existing and new measures of students economic and social disadvantage a topic that is both timely and important Dan Goldhaber American Institutes for Research and University of Washington Understanding differences across schools in what they provide for students and particularly the extent to which students living in poverty have access to differential opportunities is essential for effective policy making Yet policy makers and education decision makers have not had accurate measures of their students economic resources especially since changes in the subsidized lunch program This important book offers needed suggestions for a range of new and reliable measures and related directions for research to improve education decision making Susanna Loeb Stanford University

Paying the Price Sara Goldrick-Rab, 2016-09-01 A bracing and well argued study of America's college debt crisis necessary reading for anyone concerned about the fate of American higher education Kirkus College is far too expensive for many people today and the confusing mix of federal state institutional and private financial aid leaves countless students without the resources they need to pay for it In Paying the Price education scholar Sara Goldrick Rab reveals the devastating effect of these shortfalls Goldrick Rab examines a study of 3 000 students who used the support of federal aid and Pell Grants to enroll in public colleges and universities in Wisconsin in 2008 Half the students in the study left college without a degree while less than 20 percent finished within five years The cause of their problems time and again was lack of money Unable to afford tuition books and living expenses they worked too many hours at outside jobs dropped classes took time off to save money and even went without adequate food or housing In many heartbreaking cases they simply left school not with a degree but with crippling debt Goldrick Rab combines that data with devastating stories of six individual students whose struggles make clear the human and financial costs of our convoluted financial aid policies In the final section of the book Goldrick Rab offers a range of possible solutions from technical improvements to the financial aid application process to a bold public sector focused first degree free program Honestly one of the most exciting books I've read because Goldrick Rab has solutions It's a manual that I'd recommend to anyone out there if you're a parent if you're a teacher if you're a student Trevor Noah The Daily Show Improving Research-Based Knowledge of College Promise Programs Laura W. Perna, Edward J. Smith, 2020-03-20 Also known as free tuition and free college programs college promise programs are an emerging approach for increasing higher education attainment of people in particular places To maximize the effectiveness of their efforts and investments program leaders and policymakers need research based evidence to inform program design implementation and evaluation With the goal of addressing this knowledge need this volume presents a collection of research studies that examine several categories and variations of college promise programs These theoretically grounded empirical investigations use varied data sources and analytic techniques to examine the effects of college promise programs that have different design features and operate in different places Individually and collectively the results of these studies have implications for the design and implementation of promise programs if these programs are to create meaningful improvements in attainment for people from underserved groups The authors' efforts also provide a useful foundation for the next generation of college promise research

Leveraging Data for Student Success Laura G. Knapp, Elizabeth Glennie, Karen J. Charles, 2016-09-29 People providing services to schools teachers and students want to know whether these services are effective With that knowledge a project director can expand services that work well and adjust implementation of activities that are not working as expected When finding that an innovative strategy benefits students a project director might want to share that information with other service providers who could build upon that strategy Some organizations that fund programs for students will want a report demonstrating the program's success Determining whether a program is effective requires expertise in data collection study design and analysis Not all project directors have this expertise they tend to be primarily focused on working with schools teachers and students to undertake program activities Collecting and obtaining student level data may not be a routine part of the program This book provides an overview of the process for evaluating a program It is not a detailed methodological text but focuses on awareness of the process What do program directors need to know about data and data analysis to plan an evaluation or to communicate with an evaluator Examples focus on supporting college and career readiness programs Readers can apply these processes to other studies that include a data collection component The Costs of Completion Robin G. Isserles, 2021-12-07 To improve community college success we need to consider the lived realities of students Our nation's community colleges are facing a completion crisis The college going experience of too many students is interrupted lengthening their time to completing a degree or worse causing many to drop out altogether In The Costs of Completion Robin G Isserles contextualizes this crisis by placing blame on the neoliberal policies that have shaped public community colleges over the past thirty years The disinvestment of state funding she explains has created austerity conditions leading to an overreliance on contingent labor excessive investments in advisement technologies and a push to performance outcomes like retention and graduation rates for measuring student and institutional success The prevailing theory at the root of the community college completion crisis academic momentum suggests that students need to build momentum in their first year by becoming academically integrated thereby increasing their chances of graduating in a timely fashion A host of what Isserles terms innovative disruptions have been implemented as a way to improve on community college completion but because disruptions are primarily driven by degree attainment Isserles argues that they place learning and developing as afterthoughts while ignoring the complex lives that define so many community college students Drawing on more than twenty years of teaching advising and researching largely first generation community college students as well as an analysis of five years of student enrollment patterns college experiences and life narratives Isserles takes pains to center students and their experiences She proposes initiatives created in accordance with a care ethic which strive to not only get students through college quantifying credit accumulation and the like but also enable our most precarious students to flourish in a college environment Ultimately The Costs of Completion offers a deeper more complex understanding of who community college students are why and how they enroll and what higher education institutions can do to better support them

The Missing Manual Susan M. Dynarski, Steven W. Hemelt, Joshua M. Hyman, 2013 This paper explores the promises and pitfalls of using National Student Clearinghouse NSC data to measure a variety of postsecondary outcomes We first describe the history of the NSC the basic structure of its data and recent research interest in using NSC data Second using information from the Integrated Postsecondary Education Data System IPEDS we calculate enrollment coverage rates for NSC data over time by state institution type and demographic student subgroups We find that coverage is highest among public institutions and lowest but growing among for profit colleges Across students enrollment coverage is lower for minorities but similar for males and females We also explore two potentially less salient sources of non coverage suppressed student records due to privacy laws and matching errors due to typographic inaccuracies in student names To illustrate how this collection of measurement errors may affect estimates of the levels and gaps in postsecondary attendance and persistence we perform several case study analyses using administrative transcript data from Michigan public colleges We close with a discussion of practical issues for program evaluators using NSC data
