among the best grocery stores when you buy at a farmers market you're usually getting something that's just been harvested and therefore has much better flavor. You get to participate in the action of supporting local small businesses supporting the world we live in. Jan Beaver Farmers Markets, Low Income Communities and Government Assistance Programs Alysha Brady, 2012. Since the passage in 1976 of the Farmer to Consumer Direct Marketing Act, there has been a sharp rise in number of farmers markets in this country from approximately 600 in the 1970s to over 7,000 today. With this increase, farmers markets began to attract attention not only from farmers and consumers but also from public policy experts. Some research has suggested that farmers markets may be a way to alleviate the poor access to healthy foods in low income communities in areas known as food deserts. The WIC Farmers Market Nutrition Program (FMNP) and the Seniors Farmers Market Nutrition Program (SFMNP) are both efforts to connect low income individuals with farmers market produce. However, there is little data to suggest that farmers markets are located in food deserts often enough to have an impact. Additionally, previous research has shown that the average farmers market customer is an older, highly educated, middle to upper income female, suggesting that low income communities have not embraced farmers markets. This research seeks to shed more light on these issues. By combining data from a database of farmers markets maintained by the USDA's Agricultural Marketing Service, the food desert locator created by the USDA's Economic Research Service, and demographic data collected by the 2006-2010 American Community Survey, this study provides a clearer vision of the community that farmers markets serve. The research reveals that farmers markets in a census tract are correlated with percentage of Hispanic population, percentage identifying as Some Other Race, percentage of households living in poverty, and the percentage of households receiving SNAP food stamps. However, there was no correlation between farmers markets and food deserts. Sandtown, Baltimore Evan G. Winkler, 2010.
