Hopsine,2020-05 Menopause is a natural biological process and it s the time that marks the end of one s menstrual cycle It causes a natural decline in reproductive hormones once a woman reaches her 40s or 50s It s diagnosed after you ve gone 12 months consecutively without a menstrual period Menopause can happen in your 40s or 50s but the average age is 51 in the United States of America The most common symptoms are hot flashes and vaginal dryness Menopause can result in uncomfortable physical symptoms such as hot flashes emotional symptoms and weight gain which may disrupt your sleep lower your energy or affect emotional health The combination of these symptoms causes depression or anxiety There are many effective treatments available from lifestyle adjustments to hormone therapy For most women medical treatment isn t needed for menopause How it starts Most women first start developing menopause symptoms about four years before their last menstrual period Symptoms often continue until about four years after a woman s last period A small number of women experience menopause symptoms for up to ten years a decade before menopause actually occurs and 1 out of 10 women experience menopausal symptoms for up to twelve years following their last period The median age for menopause is 51 though it may occur on average up to two years earlier for African American and Latina women More studies are needed to understand the onset of menopause for non Caucasian women Genetics and ovary health are the major factors that determine when you ll begin menopause Perimenopause occurs prior to menopause Perimenopause is a time when your hormones begin to change in preparation for menopause It can last for a few months to several years Many women begin perimenopause some time after their mid 40s Other women skip perimenopause and enter menopause suddenly About 1 percent of women begin menopause before the age of 40 which is called premature menopause or primary ovarian insufficiency About 5 percent of women undergo menopause between the ages of 40 and 45 This is referred to as early menopause Menopause is a natural process and its treatments focus on symptomatic relief For example Vaginal dryness is treated with topical lubricants or oestrogen Medications can reduce the frequency and severity of hot flushes In special circumstances oral hormone therapy may be used Perimenopause Rogerio A. Lobo,2012-12-06 The perimenopause is an extremely important time in a woman s life In a similar but reverse sequence to puberty it signals a change in ovarian status Although some women pass through this transition without symptoms or concern for many women the perimenopause which can last several years is of great concern Symptoms of estrogen deficiency menstrual irregular ity concerns over changes in mood as well as reproductive concerns lead to anxiety and frustration Because it is poorly understood many clinicians are equally frustrated in finding ways to help their patients and question the appropriateness and or need for treatment This Serono Symposia USA Inc meeting was designed to help address some of these issues from both a basic science and a clinical perspective and to provide a forum for discussion The waning of ovarian function can be divided into two events that are dissociated gametogenic and endocrine failure Thus the symposium was divided into three parts to address these two phenomena and to discuss treatment options An outstanding international group of clinicians and investigators assembled to first address oocyte depletion and possible markers Next the complex endocrine changes were discussed as well as the physiologic consequences of these changes This included a discussion of hot flushes bone and cardiovascular changes menstrual irregularity mood disturbances and depression and anatomical changes in the ovary and breast The third part of the symposium addressed treatment options both in terms of symptoms as well as reproductive and fertility concerns

Menopause ,2015 In summary a large number of women in the UK experience menopausal symptoms which in many cases can significantly affect their quality of life It is probable that a minority of these women seek medical treatment and for those who do there is considerable variation in the help available with many being told that the symptoms will get better with time Since symptoms may often continue for 7 years or more this advice is inappropriate and help should be offered where possible Women need to know about the available options and their risks and benefits and be empowered to become part of the decision making process The need for this guideline was recognised by the Department of Health and aims to provide advice for both healthcare professionals and women regarding the menopause and the way symptom relief can be achieved It not only covers women who go through the menopause in middle age but also those with premature ovarian insufficiency POI and for whom hormones are not appropriate including women with or at high risk of breast cancer It covers the diagnosis and optimal clinical management of menopause related symptoms including hormonal and non hormonal therapies Attention is also given to the contentious issue of the impact of hormone replacement therapy HRT on chronic disease prevention although other established treatments for cardiovascular disease CVD and osteoporosis in particular are not covered
