- Links to stroke, aneurysm, and other neurological disorders
- More useful effects of high vitamin D levels
- The herb astragalus has numerous health benefits

PLUS

- Protection from L-thiamine and EGCG
- Melatonin reduces retinal damage

ASK DR. BLAYLOCK

- How much carnitine should I take?
- What will lower blood pressure?

Research Confirms Even More Benefits From Vitamin D

Vitamin D has demonstrated more health benefits than was originally believed. For a long time, it was considered valuable only for bone strength and development. But new studies have demonstrated that it does much more, mainly by affecting various systems at different cellular levels — though the mechanisms of some of these effects remain a mystery, and the public (especially many doctors) believe that we must know how something works in order to accept it as useful. But that has never been true.

For instance, we still don't fully understand how consciousness works — but it obviously does. The same thing goes for our understanding of life itself. We all think we know what it is, but what exactly do we mean? Where does it go when someone dies? Cells of dead organisms have all the same biochemical and physical machinery as living organisms. So why are they not alive?

Physicists maintain that we understand only about 10 percent of what happens in the universe, though we know it happens. The other 90 percent is a mystery only God understands.

In medicine, we do not fully understand how some physiological systems work — but we know they work. And we know that many supplements affect metabolism in a positive way, though once again we do not fully understand exactly how they work.

In this month's issue of The Blaylock Wellness Report, I will explain new research about the benefits of vitamin D. I will also explain the many ways the herbal extract astragalus can contribute to better health.

Denial About the Power of Natural Compounds

When I started in the field of nutrition, very little was understood about how supplements and plant extracts actually work to support better health. Now we know a lot more — in many cases, more than we understand about pharmaceutical medications — because technology has become a great deal more sophisticated, uncovering many nutritional secrets.

Natural plant chemicals can do a great deal more than artificially
