On Combat: The Psychology and Physiology of Deadly Conflict in War and Peace

This Book Summary was written by Sam McKinney, School of Conflict Analysis and Resolution (S-CAR), George Mason University, in December 2012.

This piece was prepared as part of the S-CAR / Beyond Intractability Collaborative.

Shu Deng acted as a peer reviewer on this piece.

Citation: Grossman, Dave and Loren W. Christensen. On Combat: The Psychology and Physiology of Deadly Conflict in War and Peace. 2nd ed. PPCT Research Publications, 2007.

David Grossman, a former United States Army Ranger and West Point psychology professor, wrote On Combat: The Psychology and Physiology of Deadly Conflict in War and in Peace with former police officer Loren Christensen. The book is based on interviews and debriefs of soldiers and police, the authors' own personal experience, and research by others in the field. While Grossman presents the book as a work for military and law enforcement, he does make mention of traditional peace workers in saying, "I hope this book will be of use to the gentle, decent and discerning spirits in the peace movement." The author includes military, police, development, relief, and medical personnel under the umbrella term "peace warriors", and believes that all peace warriors "must study and master combat as the firefighter would study and master fire." It is my hope in writing this summary that I can extract and clearly present the information that is most important for peace warriors in the conflict resolution community.

There is a great deal of information in On Combat that pertains more specifically to the training and philosophy of the armed warrior (some of which was not included in this review for brevity's sake), but I believe there is content in the book that can also prove useful to peace workers in a few ways. Modern conflict zones frequently have no front line, and so anyone working in one would do well to understand the consequences of extreme high stress on most humans. Similarly, an understanding of the lasting effects of combat on those who fight can aid in the process of reintegrating soldiers post-conflict, and can help peace workers sympathize with allied military and civilians in combat zones with whom they may be working closely. Additionally, I would argue that a general understanding of emotional trauma is vital for anyone working in any conflict related field.
