  - a. Discuss story elements such as exposition, climax and resolution.
  - b. Demonstrate the practice of stopping at the end of chapters to summarize and review the content.
  - c. Ask students to complete a review sheet before taking the unit test.
  - d. Practice decoding unfamiliar words throughout the book by using knowledge of frequently-used root words.
8. A teacher notices that her new student, Carl, has a hard time answering questions related to comprehension during class and has scored low on comprehension quizzes and worksheets. What would be the most logical first step in determining how to help Carl?
  - a. Encourage Carl to read all assigned texts at least twice before class to help him understand what he has read.
  - b. Provide Carl with story maps of what he will be reading to assist his comprehension visually.
  - c. Ask Carl to read aloud with his teacher individually so that she can ensure that he is reading with expected accuracy and speed (i.e., fluently).
  - d. Modify Carl's class work so that he is able to work on easier comprehension material until his skills are brought up to speed.
9. Which of the following would be the best strategy for helping eighth-grade students choose books that they will read independently and use to write book reports?
  - a. Provide two choices from which the students can pick that you know everybody can understand.
  - b. Allow students to freely pick their books, but require that they read a few pages aloud to you in order to ensure that the reading level is neither too easy nor too difficult based on their abilities.
  - c. Encourage the students to read a book that contains unfamiliar words and idioms so that they will be challenged to use context clues, dictionaries and other sources to build comprehension.
  - d. Establish no parameters on book selection to encourage free choice and promote students' excitement about the project.
10. Which of the following students is not performing "at grade level" according to TEKS standards and may warrant academic support or testing?
