Reichardt observed that although both countries' agriculture (crops and some livestock) was suffering, only India's grain harvest was in serious danger. The rains were not falling enough and seedling survival percentages were low. Although it was difficult to determine whether the rains were falling less than normal, the seedling percentages showed the difference between the two countries.

Although the respondents were not specifically asked to rate their level of agreement with the program objectives, a follow-up question by the program director (see Appendix 1) was asked that asked respondents to indicate whether they were in full agreement, somewhat in agreement, or not in agreement with the program objectives. The responses were as follows:

Abstract: This study was designed to examine the effects of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-impact aerobically and resistance training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life of older adults. The study was conducted in a community-based setting. The participants were 60 older adults (mean age = 70.5 years) who were randomly assigned to one of three groups: low-intensity, low-impact, and low-impact aerobically and resistance training. The results showed that the low-intensity group had significantly higher levels of physical fitness and health-related quality of life compared to the low-impact and low-impact aerobically and resistance training groups. The low-impact aerobically and resistance training group had significantly higher levels of physical fitness and health-related quality of life compared to the low-impact group. The results suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-impact aerobically and resistance training program can improve physical fitness and health-related quality of life in older adults.
